Headteacher's daily blog

Date: Thursday 7th May 2020

Dear all,

The good weather has returned! It does seem to make such a difference to everyone's well-being. I have really enjoyed looking through all the year group's learning blogs over the last few days and weeks. I know all the teachers are working really hard to try to do the impossible - prepare home learning that is suitable for all family circumstances. From conversations with the staff, I know that many of you have wisely selected which tasks work best at which times and I hope that the phone calls from teachers have either spurred some children on or reinforced the message that you, as parents / carers, can only do your best in trying circumstances.

You will be aware that there will be announcements at the weekend about the possibility of schools re-opening. I have planned remote staff meetings on Monday and Tuesday to discuss the implications of whatever is announced and will pass on any information to you when I know more.

A parent, who works for the NHS, sent me a link to a booklet, 'When your parent is a key worker'. There is some useful information here for all parents.

The next whole school blog will be sent out on Monday May 11th. In the meantime, I hope you enjoy the Bank Holiday and the rest of the weekend.

Wishing you all the best,

Mr Henery
